SIGNIFICANCE OF ELECTION.

If the election on last Tuesday has any significance it is that the stamp of disapproval of the people has been put upon things political going under the name of Stand Pat. The country during the eight years of Democracy and Woodrow Wilson had a demonstration of constructive legislation, such as the country never had before in its history. It was eight years of keeping promises and doing something, the very best that could be desired. The people had a right to expect when a change was made that the party receiving the benefit of the change would be equal to the emergency and give remedies for the issues of the time, have a constructive Republican plan. But the President was named by the greatest Stand Pat the country ever had. Parroze, the administration followed his political scheme of doing nothing—Stand Pat—and amid all the uncertainties of the after-the-war period, with conditions such as never faced the country before, not a remedy or relief came from the party in power, only stand pat and give privileged classes the highest tariff wall the nation has ever had. The party in power has been deaf to political ideals. This significance of events sank into the minds of the people, with the many contributing side issues and the result has been the greatest landslide in history in which the people reversed themselves after a period of two years by tens and hundreds of thousands. This election means that Stand Pat is dead if those who represent it have the ability to understand.

CONGRESSIONAL LEGISLATION.

Stop and contemplate the huge reverse the Republican party has received. In 1920 the results of the election gave that party the United States Senate by a majority of 24 and the House of Representatives by a majority of 165. The people expected that the Republican party would accept the trust and show it was worthy of the power placed in that party's hands. Having demonstrated to the contrary, the people have practically taken out of their hands the power given. The Republican majority is now down to 8 and the balance of power in the Senate is in the hands of La Follette, independents and insurgents. The Republican majority in the House is now seven and that means the independent-insurgent tail will be able to wag the dog. This condition either means that constructive legislation that will appeal to all parties, will get through or that after another two years of wind jamming the Harding Administration will go down in history as a failure equal to that of Hayes, who held the chair that belonged to another.

Election Interpretations.

A Washington dispatch reviewing the election says:

So complete is the defeat of the Administration that politicians here are generally of the opinion that Mr. Harding can not be a candidate to succeed himself, at least with any hope of success, and it is regarded as very doubtful if he will wish to be.

The President was not the only outstanding figure in possible Presidential developments whose aspirations were emphatically set back by this extraordinary election. Albert J. Beveridge, who was conceded to be a Presidential possibility, and Governor Miller of New York, who was declared by his friends to be the strongest Republican Presidential "chance" in the East, have been eliminated as possible factors.

The heavy losses suffered by the Republicans were stand-pat losses in almost every instance. In cases in which progressive candidates were the contenders the Republicans won. The men who went down to defeat were those who tried in making the new tariff law, carrying the highest rates in the nation's history, like Frelinghuysen and Calder, and men who had supported Newberryism, like Townsend of Michigan, who had been identified with machine politics.

One of the most tangible manifestations of the political upheaval is found in the winning out of the majority of organization Republicans in the Senate. The present Senate consists of sixty Republicans and thirty-six Democrats. The Republican majority is so large that the few independent members had no influence. The Republicans in Tuesday's election were defeated in their Senatorial contests in New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, West Virginia, Minnesota, Michigan, Oregon, and probably North Dakota. In turn, they defeated a Democrat in Nebraska and gained a seat in Ohio.

Of the new Republicans elected at least three are radical progressives. These include Brookhart of Iowa, Howell of Nebraska, and Shipstead of Minnesota. The last named ran as a farmer-labor candidate, but is classed as a progressive Republican.

With these three additions to the independents of the Senate and the loss of at least eight seats to the regulars, the latter are reduced to a voting strength of forty-four, and the independents will hold the balance of power. La Follette has once more become a potential factor in the affairs of the nation. The other men in the present senate who have refused to be controlled by party orders are Johnson of California, Norris of Nebraska, Borah of Idaho and Norbeck of South Dakota. With Howell, Brookhart and Shipstead added this group will consist of eight. They differ greatly in the degrees of their radicalism.

Even Senator Lodge, who pulled through by a small majority, must return to Washington with a chastened spirit and a realization that the elections contain a warning that must be heeded before the Presidential contest in 1924.

Another aspect of the election is the move already started by Senator-elect Ferris of Michigan to unseat Newberry. The next Senate will have a majority of ten to unseat the Michigan hold-over, whose seat was retained for him by a scant majority of three.

DEATHS.

one daughter, Miss Mildred, at home; also her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Wolf, of Abbottstown; a brother, Rev. Norman Wolf, of Glen Rock, and a sister, Miss Clara Wolf, of York. The body was taken to her parental home in Abbottstown for interment.

Colonel William D. Uhler, 50 years old, chief engineer of the State Highway Department for seven years, died last Friday morning at his home in Harrisburg after a brief illness. His wife survives him. Colonel Uhler was one of the earliest advocates of good roads in the country, and many of his ideas in road construction have been widely adopted. He was a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, the American Society for Testing Material, a member of the Executive Committee and a past president of the American Association of Highway Officials, and a member of the International Association of Road Engineers. He served with the government during the Spanish-American War and later acted as assistant to Major General George Goethals on highway matters.

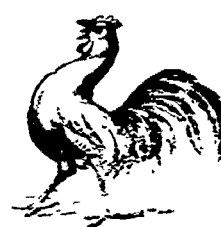

Orville James Starnier, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Starnier, of Aspers, died last Friday night aged 5 days. Surviving are his parents and one brother, Cornelius Starnier, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Starnier, the grandparents. Funeral services last Sunday afternoon at the Mt. Tabor Church, services by the Rev. R. R. Zeigler, and interment at Mt. Tabor.

Warren Eugene Cashman, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Cashman, of near New Oxford, died last week from internal spasms. The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, interment in the New Oxford Cemetery, services by Rev. W. M. Allison.

Howard D. McAllester, of Youngstown, Ohio, died Monday, Oct. 23, after a very short illness from diphtheria. He was a member of the U. B. Church of Cleveland. Had he lived March 29th he would have reached his 20th birthday and on that day Miss Fannie H. Arnold, near Gettysburg, was to have become the bride of Mr. McAllester. His father, H. L. McAllester, is the only surviving relative. For the past year Mr. McAllester has been instructor and clerk in a large music store in Youngstown, and was a graduate of the Saxophone Music School of Lorain. His body was taken to Cleveland for interment.

Abram Weigle, of Heidlersburg, died on Tuesday at the Annie M. Warner Hospital from injuries received last Friday at the age of 71 years, 5 months and 6 days. Mr. Weigle lived alone in Heidlersburg, having retired some years ago from farming, and on Friday evening went to a store in the square of Heidlersburg to have some money changed, and being unsuccessful started to cross the square to another store when an automobile headed toward Gettysburg came into sight. The driver of the car is believed blinded by Mr. Weigle. He is said to have stepped backward, evidently dazed, and into the path of the machine. It was driven by W. H. Mort, of Altoona. Mr. Weigle was struck by the fender of car and thrown to road and his skull was fractured. Mr. Mort stopped the car and picked up Mr. Weigle and brought him to the Annie M. Warner Hospital where he lingered until Tuesday. Mr. Weigle was a veteran of the Civil War. The funeral was on Friday with services by Revs. W. I. Kauffman and J. Berkholder, with interment in Sunnyside Cemetery, York Springs.

Mrs. Samuel Stoops died Tuesday evening at her home in Hamilton township, near Fairfield, aged 59 years. She is survived by her husband, Samuel Stoops; a daughter, Mrs. Anna Baker; her father, J. Francis Strasbaugh, and two brothers. Funeral services were held Friday morning by Rev. Walter C. Pugh and burial in the Fairfield Cemetery.

Protection of Fruit Trees

At this season of the year it is well to remind the orchardists of Adams County of the injury to fruit trees, especially young trees, by rabbits and mice. Grass and weeds around the trunks of the trees afford protection to these pests, and should be removed.

Where there is any reason to believe that rodents will damage the trees, the removal of weed growth from the ground around the tree should be followed by the application of a repellent or by the use of a tree protector. Blood smeared on the trees will repel rabbits but not mice. A thick lime sulphur paste will usually turn both rabbits and mice away.

An excellent tree protector that may be left on for several seasons, is one made from half-inch mesh wire screening. According to Paul Thayer, extension pomologist at the Pennsylvania State College, one of these protectors, though slightly more expensive than other tree guards, will last a tree as long as protection is required, and requires no attention after being placed in position. The wire screening is purchased in three-foot widths, from which pieces 18 by 18 inches are cut. These pieces are then rolled into cylinders and placed around the trees with selvage end up, as the selvage is less liable to chafe the tree. Cheaper tree protection can be made from building paper and wood veneer, but these must be removed in the spring.

Feeding the Fattening Pig

How often do we see a bunch of small, runty barrows that at six months of age, weigh less than 100 pounds each, only half their weight that they should carry at that age? The hogman, who is trying to make a profit on his feeding operations, can well stop to consider the "why" and the "wherefore" of the small, undersized, unprofitable pig, since the pig is usually the determining factor in profitable pork production.

The correct type of fattening pig is a well-bred individual that carries the right conformation for the making of economical gains in weight. This characteristic is inherited from the sire and the dam. The care of the pigs second only in importance to the selection of the right kind of feeders. The pigs should be given a good start, especially if they are the fall crop.

It is easy to get the pigs off to a good start if a creep is made for them while they are still with the sow. As soon as they learn to eat, keep a supply of good, clean food before them and make sure that it is not allowed to become foul, musty or moldy. Fix a self-feeder inside the creep and get the pigs accustomed to it as soon as they are weaned.

A good mixture for the self-feeder is made of 100 pounds cornmeal, 300 pounds middlings, and 100 pounds of 60 per cent tankage. This makes a good feed for the pigs until they weigh about 125 pounds when the corn mixture may be increased to 600 pounds. Keep the pigs well supplied with plenty of fresh water. An exercising lot, dry sleeping quarters, and ample protection from weather and other essentials of successful management, but these should not be carried to such extremes that a hot-house product results.

Poultry

It is at this time of year that the poultryman keeps a weather eye out for the first signs of fall colds in his flock. Knowing that these colds undermine the health of the flock to a point where roup, canker, and other diseases may gain a foothold, he realizes the full value of early preventative measures. P. L. Sanford, poultry extension specialist at the Pennsylvania State College in advising Adams County farmers on the importance of such measures, places greatest emphasis on the prevention of dampness and drafts, and on proper ventilation of the hen-house.

Dampness may be due to roofs that leak, floors that are damp, or houses that are closed tight without ventilation. The first cause is easily remedied. The second, that of damp floors, may be harder to cope with, but it is of most importance. Ventilation will probably present the most serious problem, since it is necessary that no drafts be caused. Drafts back of the perches, and directly over the perches are dangerous and should be avoided. The birds should also be protected from floor drafts.

Over-crowding is another serious condition, and should be prevented. Be sure that every hen has four square feet of floor space. This rule applies to the Leghorns as well as the heavy breeds.

Get Your License Tags on Time

"Now is the time to send in your applications for 1923 motor vehicle registrations and licenses," was the keynote of a statement made today by Assistant State Highway Commissioner George H. Biles, who announced that shipment of license plates would be started by the Automobile Division on November 15. He particularly urged the cooperation of manufacturers, department stores, corporations and other organizations owning large fleets of motor vehicles to forward applications without delay in order that there may be no interruption to their business on January first.

Commissioner Biles said: "Pennsylvania's motor vehicle registration for 1923 will be enormous. Thousands of motorists will desire to use their cars on January First and, in order that they may not be deprived of doing so, we urge early applications for licenses, so that the Automobile Division can make delivery prior to that date. A forty-eight hour delivery cannot be guaranteed on applications received after December 25, 1922, to permit applicants to use tags January 1st. At "Motor vehicles of the passenger class, used only at intervals for carrying goods, wares or merchandise, or used in the carrying of the United States mail, are registered under passenger motor vehicle classification at forty cents per horsepower, the minimum fee being ten dollars."

"Motor omnibuses—which include taxicabs, jitneys, etc., used for the transportation of passengers for pay or hire are defined as commercial vehicles; those with chassis under two thousand pounds are registered under passenger car classification at forty cents per horsepower, with a minimum fee of fifteen dollars. Those with a chassis over two thousand pounds are registered under commercial motor vehicle classification according to chassis weight of vehicle."

Buy Apples for Winter.

This week was Apple Week, but the advice of Secretary of Agriculture is as good for the next few weeks as now. He says there are eight million bushels of apples that are available at this time but with no storage facilities for them. Unless these apples are taken into the homes and stored for future use, a large part of this crop will be an economic loss.

"Pennsylvania does not have an over-production of apples. The yield is good—it is also good in other states. If the people of Pennsylvania will purchase liberally of this healthful fruit making their purchases in bulk and storing the apples for winter use, the Pennsylvania crop can be disposed of without loss."

"Last year apples were scarce and the price considerably higher than during the present year. Yet in 1921 there were 3,491,000 bushels of apples shipped into the fifteen principal cities of this state, all coming from other states."

"Pennsylvania's apples have a flavor and texture that cannot be excelled by fruit grown anywhere in the United States. I therefore appeal to the people of Pennsylvania to purchase liberally of the State's fruit crop that we may not sustain an economic loss which would be almost irreparable."

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

THE MISSING MESSENGER

IT WAS on June 14, 1904, that Kent Loomis, brother of F. B. Loomis, the assistant secretary of state, sailed from New York on board the Kaiser Wilhelm II. bearing with him the text of a treaty between the United States and Abyssinia—a treaty concerning which there had been much conjecture and speculation on the part of certain European powers.

Under ordinary circumstances Loomis would have taken his wife and child with him; on this occasion, he considered it best to leave them behind in Parkersburg, W. Va., both on account of the fact that he was on a diplomatic mission and because he intended to participate in some big game hunting after delivering the treaty to King Menelik.

Nothing unusual occurred on the trip until the morning of June 20, the day on which the steamer was due to dock at Plymouth, England. It was then noted that Loomis' seat at the captain's table was empty and a steward was dispatched to find out if he were ill. A few minutes later the steward returned with the news that Loomis' berth had not been occupied and an immediate search of the ship was ordered—but without bringing to light the slightest trace of the representative of the American government.

Several passengers volunteered the information that they had seen Loomis on deck shortly after midnight and William E. Ellis, cabin-mate and traveling companion of the missing passenger, declared that his friend's absence from the cabin had not alarmed him because of the fact that Loomis had come in at a fairly late hour on several previous evenings.

British officials at Plymouth and the French officers at Cherbourg repeated the search of the steamer, but in vain. Nothing was missing from the cabin save the suit which Loomis was wearing at the time and even the flat dispatch box which contained the text of the treaty was found concealed beneath a pile of clothing in one corner of Loomis' trunk. Investigation developed the fact, however, that the State department messenger had been in the habit of carrying this box in his pocket and had laid it aside on the previous evening only because it made an unseemly bulge in the dress clothes which he had donned in honor of the captain's dinner.

During the next few weeks rumors of all kinds filled the press on both sides of the Atlantic. Loomis had gone suddenly mad and had been placed in a sanatorium. He had slipped off the steamer at Plymouth disguised as a second-class passenger. He was the victim of a clique of international spies who, banded in their attempt to secure possession of the text of the treaty, were holding him for ransom. He was still confined in the hold of the Kaiser Wilhelm—and so on to the limit of the imaginations of those who like to use fact as a basis for fiction.

But all these reports were set at rest when, on the morning of July 16—just thirty-two days after Loomis had sailed from New York—a body was washed up at Warren Point, about fifteen miles from Plymouth. Believing that the body was that of a common sailor, the local police were about to inter it without further ceremony, when, from the watch-pocket of the trousers there dropped a water-soaked bit of pasteboard upon which was barely discernible the name, "Kent J. Loomis."

Careful examination of the body developed the fact that, under the right ear, there was a circular wound which appeared to have been inflicted before death and a post-mortem examination of the lungs of the dead man showed conclusively that death had been due to the blow which had resulted in this wound, rather than to drowning. The physicians were divided in their opinion as to whether the blow had been delivered by an instrument similar to a blackjack or whether Loomis might have fallen and struck his head against a projecting portion of the ironwork on the steamer. Examination of the Kaiser Wilhelm's log showed, however, that the sea had been extremely calm on the night that Loomis came to his death and that there had not been enough roll to cause anyone to lose his footing. Besides, there was the evidence of the manner in which the body was clothed. The coat was missing, the collar had been torn partly away and there were other signs of rough treatment before Loomis had struck the water.

It was therefore practically certain that the messenger had been murdered. But who had killed him—and why? Had he been struck down on account of the money he was carrying or because of the treaty? Was his death a forecast of the World war which was to follow twelve years later?

These and all the other questions which surrounded the mystery remain as one of the unsolved riddles of diplomatic intrigue.

A Bit Skeptical.

"Who is the important looking stranger?"

"He styles himself advance guard of prosperity. He is here to address the business men of our town."

"The hotel proprietor doesn't seem to believe he's the advance guard of prosperity. He has just refused to cash the stranger's check."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

THAT BAD BACK.

Do you have a dull, steady ache in the small of the back—sharp, stabbing twinges when stooping or lifting—distressing urinary disorders? For bad back and weakened kidneys Gettysburg residents recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. Read this Gettysburg statement.

Robert J. Cook, 245 N. Stratton St., says: "Three years ago my kidneys got out of fix. I didn't know what caused it but they were surely disordered. I felt mighty lame in the small of my back when I went to get up in the morning and no sooner did I bend over than the sharp, stinging pains ran through my back. My back had me out of sorts all over and I was in such shape that when I went to lift anything a pain cut me in my back and felt as if it were pulling me down. My kidneys seemed clogged up and were very inactive. I was out of condition in every way. Doan's Kidney Pills have been used in my family so I got some at the People's Drug Store. They got right down to the trouble and fixed up my back and out my kidneys in good condition again."

ATLAS PORTLAND CEMENT

PORTLAND cement requires expensive manufacturing machinery, delicate and accurate analysis, proportioning and supervision—it is probably the most costly of all building materials to manufacture. In use on the job it is one of the most economical.

To the building world it is what sugar is to the grocer—a small profit item that must depend on volume for any profit at all. Your building material dealer is actually doing your community a favor when he stocks cement—it is an essential, and as such he carries it.

But because it is an essential you can enable him to continue to stock it. There are a dozen small jobs, and perhaps some big ones, where you can most economically and profitably use concrete right now. You'll be surprised how cheaply it can be used.
